When the world gets richer, inequality becomes uglier: Why India cannot escape the trend

An eventful year, 2025, ends, opening the door for its progeny, 2026, to take birth, grow in full bloom, fade and die exactly a year later. But the change in calendar may not necessarily see the change in political discourse anywhere in the world. Leaders largely remain the same — except with a headline-hogging incoming New York City mayor Zohran Mamdani — with the same set of agenda to grab or stay in power. India is also unlikely to be an exception. So, when I saw a post by efficiently vocal Member of Parliament (MP) from Bihar's Rashtriya Janata Dal (RJD) — which recently got a serious drubbing at the hands of Prime Minister Narendra Modi's Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP)-led coalition in the assembly election — Manoj Jha blaming the incumbent government in New Delhi for the growing economic inequality in India, I dug into some reports, data by global organisations, opinions of experts and numbers to understand who is to be blamed for such inequality. This exercise was also necessitated by the fact that Manoj Jha has been a career professor of social work who has taught at India's premier institutions. Global experience of national development suggests that if a country grows economically, it does not care for sociology or socialism. How do G7 and OECD countries fare on inequality? Across the G7 and OECD, long-term trends show inequality increasing. McKinsey noted in a 2019 publication that "wealth and income inequality in general has been rising since the 1980s" in many advanced economies. For example, from 1980 to 2014 the top one per cent share of disposable income in the OECD roughly doubled (from ~6 per cent to ~11 per cent).

Wealth inequality is even starker: in 2014 about 27 per cent of G7 national wealth was owned by the top one per cent, versus only ~13 per cent of income. While not all OECD countries moved in lockstep, the majority saw rising inequality. In two-thirds of OECD countries, average wealth dispersion (measured by mean-to-median wealth) increased from 2000 to the 2010s, McKinsey report said. Notably, countries hit hard by recent crises — Ireland, some Eastern European economies (Latvia, Slovenia), Switzerland, and the United States — saw significant Gini increases in wealth. However, by contrast, Belgium, Poland and Sweden bucked the trend and saw wealth inequality decline. But the rule no.1 is: The top-tier rules - Income shares likewise reveal steep top-end gains. In the US, for instance, the top one per cent share of pre-tax income grew from about 10-11 per cent in 1980 to roughly 20 per cent by the 2010s. The US Federal Reserve reports that as of 2024 the bottom half of US households hold only ~2.5 per cent of total wealth, while the top one per cent hold ~30.5 per cent — a gap that has widened substantially since 1989. Similarly, UK official data show the richest one per cent income share rising from about 7 per cent in 2011 to 8.2 per cent by 2020 even as the poorest half's share has remained around ~15-20 per cent.
